ness impartially served. By settling those who were not of the right manner of thinking in those in which our rights are so widely open, according to the Treaty, we can let the authorities of those places take their disposition, and we shall be able to have the Missionary affairs and foreign intercourse exist, give order to the people to assist in their proceedings, not believe false rumors, and not take opportunity to make attacks upon foreigners, and to be contented with the Missionaries in their proper duty. The people must not have the audacity to disturb the public places, to their temples, and have then severely punished. If the people are not obedient in doing, the people and Missionaries will enjoy peace, and serious temptors will be avoided. Let the people be obedient to the laws of the provinces have a copy of this edict, and let them order their subordinate officers properly to take care of the people, and not permit that serious consequences may be put to an end. 24th day of the 8th Month of the 7th Year of Tientsin, 17th October, 1859.

is the size of body, thereby effecting a great economy of space, achieving a clearness not previously attained, and dispensing with those wide margins and vacant spaces which have heretofore characterized Chinese publications.
The scope of the work is great, and the utilitarian purposes so complete, that a reference to its pages enables a person who understands English to converse with confidence with natives who understand nothing but Chinese. In this respect the work will be found an indispensable English-Chinese dictionary to Chinese and to the natives themselves. It explains subjects fully, with which very few instances of them have been hitherto treated.
Persons resident in England and interested in China it cannot but be invaluable occasionally.
The contents comprise of five thousand large quarto pages.
